

late nite laughs

The Tonight Show with Jay Leno (Oct 14 2010)

- The rescued Chilean miners were sent to the hospital for observation, except for the one with the wife and the mistress. He went straight to the witness protection program.
- The White House said that the Democrats have "the momentum" going into midterm elections. Of course you have momentum when you're going downhill fast.
- Vice President Joe Biden says that President Obama has asked him to run with him in 2012. So on behalf of all late night hosts, thank you Mr. President.
- For the first time in history, there were 100,000 home foreclosures in the month of September — 100,000 people were told they're going to lose their house . . . well, 100,001 if you count Nancy Pelosi.

Late Show with David Letterman (Oct 14 2010)

- We couldn't have picked a better night to be here. The entire balcony is full of Chilean miners.
- My mom and I were watching the miners being rescued. Every time they saved one, we did a whiskey shot.
- One miner's wife found out he had a mistress. He's a half-mile underground. Isn't that where you want to be when that happens?
- In a debate, Christine O'Donnell said, "What I think is irrelevant." Thanks, I'll remember that on Election Day.

The Late Late Show with Craig Ferguson (Oct 14 2010)

- Brett Favre was hit in the groin with a football during practice. He didn't go to the doctor, he just sent a picture.
- President Obama appeared on MTV for a town hall program. It was just before the new episode of "Jersey Shore." Nothing says low approval ratings like opening for Snooki.
- It's a good idea for Obama to appeal to younger voters because he has to find people that are young enough to not be disappointed in his performance.
- In 2008, John McCain was also trying to go after young people, but he thought young people meant anyone that's still upset about the Spanish-American War.
